The FCC's Affordable Connectivity Program formerly called the Emergency Broadband Benefit program is a government program that reduces an eligible household's broadband internet service bill. Discounts are provided through monthly bill credits, limited to one per household and the amount varies based on customer location and qualifying service. An application ID from the National Verifier must be provided to Kinetic by Windstream to receive the discount. Kinetic by Windstream is not responsible for program qualification decisions and cannot make any guarantees of eligibility, qualification for a certain credit amount or length of time the credit will be available to be applied to your monthly bill. Credits may be applied toward monthly internet services, modem equipment fees, and a connected device, such as a laptop, computer, or tablet only and customers will be responsible for payment of any one-time or monthly charges not covered by the credits. Affordable Connectivity Program credits may be used with a provider of your choosing, such as with Kinetic, and may be moved to another provider at any time. Once credits are no longer available, you will be subject to Kinetic by Windstream's then-current rates and terms and conditions.
